ligan. As you appear to be interested I will give you the details of the occasion on which these two great men first met. A game had been arranged between the the Fourth of July and, at the head of a the game. It was to be a bitter contest and the country for miles around knew of pitcher, was to twirl for the Burnt Acorns, and opposed to him as a batter was the redoubtable and peerless Swat Milligan, the pride of the West.
